

Abstract

Ian Dudderar, Joshua Lumpkin, Makayla Middleton, and Dr. Jim Bowring
Department of Computer Science, College of Charleston

This semester we were able to interact with an open source community, understanding the dynamics of an open source project. We learned how to use an industry standard tool called “Git” through Github. This allowed us to gain valuable experience in project management and team collaboration. We worked with SugarLabs which is a free open source learning platform which promotes learning through the user created “sugar activities.” We were able to contribute to these activities by enhancing the code and performing bug fixes.